CAPTURE OF SAN ISIDRO

MORE FORDING OF RIVERS THAN FIGHTING.

Prisoners Captured—The White Man's Burden—Capture of Rifles More Important Than the Capture of Prisoners.

Special Correspondence of The Star.

MANILA, July 6.—Of the capture of San Miguel, I have told you. Our brigade remained there two days expecting to return to Manila, but got orders to go on and left San Miguel at 2 p. m. May 15. An hour later the scouts had trouble with the Filipinos who were well entrenched on the river bank. Ten Filipinos were killed and as many more wounded without loss on our side, and we captured their bull train, which they had to leave in their haste.

At Salasot, four miles from San Miguel, we had to cross the river as a ford. The banks are steep on both sides. By means of ropes the men held the carts of our bull train from going down too fast, and helped draw them up on the other. With thirty men pulling on the ropes, the Chinese drivers hitting the buffaloes with clubs, and every one yelling "siery," the carts would go up with a rush. It was 9 o'clock before the last cart got into Salasot. We got a scraw from the fields to sleep on, using our ponchos and shelter tents as sheets. Few of the boys ever put up shelter tents, having discovered that they are not waterproof and are practically useless for the purpose designed.

We set out next morning at daylight for a camping place near San Isidro, eighteen scouts going in advance. Two miles from San Isidro the scouts captured a bridge and intrenchments. They killed eleven Filipino soldiers, captured eight prisoners and sixteen Mauser rifles.

There was some shooting all afternoon, and it was necessary to send out details to drive the "insurrectos" back when they came too close to the camp, the grass eight feet high, and the jungle, protecting them perfectly. The prisoners and wounded were from the province of Albay, and were the first native soldiers we had met who were not Tagalos. They told us they were tired of fighting "good Americans," and also that there were several thousand soldiers at San Isidro, both of which statements were false. Native sources of information are absolutely unreliable. Some of the prisoners had the legs of their trousers torn off up to the knee. They said they had torn them off in small strips as they needed gun rags.

By dark we had rebuilt the burned bridge, tearing down buildings for material. We found a Spaniard who had been killed, shot through the head. He was well dressed and had a large bundle of clothing of good quality. We could not find out whether he had been fighting with the Filipinos or had been trying to escape to the American lines.

Next morning General Lawton ordered the advance on San Isidro. The North Dakotas, one battalion of the Oregon, the Twenty-second Infantry and the Fourth cavalry were on the line, with the four 3.2 inch guns in the center, and the Minnetonkas in reserve. The boys always speak of the artillery as the "Peace Commission," and it and the infantry have solved things that mere words and promises have no effect on.

The advance was made about 6 o'clock in the morning. The fight did not last long. Our battalion only fired from ten to thirty shots to the man. The "Peace Commission" got in four shells each, and the Filipinos passed off to the right out of range.

Company E, Second Oregon, captured six rifles and five prisoners, who were immediately put to carrying "The White Man's Burden," of canteens, haversacks, and shelter tents into town. The North Dakotas got about twenty-five rifles. There is an overproduction of able bodied Filipinos, in proportion to the number of rifles they are able to carry, so that most of the enlisted men consider the capture of a rifle more important than killing or wounding the enemy.

JOHN B. FINLEY,
Second Oregon.

"I feel that I ought to write a few words in praise of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has done great things for me. I was in a delicate condition and was sick at my stomach and constipated. I tried remedies highly recommended for female weaknesses, but the medicines brought on other troubles. I was so weak I could not attend to my household duties, and I then determined to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. After I had taken this medicine a short time I began to gain strength. I Since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills I feel rested in the morning. I am less nervous and am sure I have richer and purer blood. I have always been bothered with scrofula, but now I am rid of it. Before my last child was born I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and my girl baby was fat and strong, while my other child was not well and lived to be only two years old." Mrs. E. P.
